The West Virginia Railroad Museum is excited to present the work of nationally acclaimed railroad photographer DR. FREDERICK J. RIPLEY as the centerpiece of this season's exhibit! On display are 27 of Ripley's colorful and dramatic images taken throughout West Virginia and the surrounding mountain region over the last 35 years. These archival-quality 20" x 30" enlargements are dry-mounted on foam core for permanence and framed under glass, and each is accompanied by detailed caption information written by the photographer. All of Ripley's photos are for sale, and all sales benefit the West Virginia Railroad Museum. The exhibit also includes a fascinating selection of older photos, maps from various eras, and detailed interpretive text panels. The museum is on the upper level of the historic Darden Mill building, a beautifully restored venue in this former railroad town. Don't miss the opportunity to enjoy this compelling exhibit about railroading in the Mountain State!
